INTRODUCTION

The Transition to Practice Guide utilizes the Hogan Personality Inventory (HPI) to evaluate professionals in the healthcare field on seven well known dimensions or characteristics that influence occupational success. This guide is based on your assessment results and describes how you are likely to act in various circumstances, it notes your strengths, challenges and offers suggestions about how to manage your career as a healthcare professional.

The seven scales within this guide highlight your likely everyday behavior. There are two sections provided to take notes that will assist you in processing your data and help you formulate a plan for professional development.

The Test is Valid and Interpretable.

Adjustment: Confidence and Composure Under Pressure

Strengths

You are typically calm and able to handle pressure, but at the same time willing to admit errors and listen to feedback.

Challenges

Although you are usually calm and steady under pressure, you may sometimes experience stress that others are unaware of. Almost everyone has some issue about which they are sensitive. The key is to understand these sensitive situations and avoid being irritable or emotionally inconsistent when these situations arise.

Suggestions

Solicit feedback about your performance from fellow residents and pay attention to negative feedback - don't just dismiss it. Make sure you contribute appropriately to team efforts.

Notes

Reflective Feedback:

Action Items:

Ambition: Initiative and Competitiveness

- Strengths You seem confident and willing to take charge of a group or project when necessary, but you are equally comfortable letting others take the lead role.
- Challenges You sometimes seem indifferent as to who is responsible for patients and clinic tasks. You may not position yourself to take control of tasks or team assignments where you can clearly make an impact.
- Suggestions Step up to challenges, take initiative, and be enthusiastic. At the same time, stay focused on important organizational or group tasks and be results-oriented. You should look for opportunities to assume leadership roles while supporting your colleagues through both words and actions.

Sociability: Extraversion

Strengths

Others, and especially strangers, may see you as mannerly and somewhat formal. You should not mind working alone, prefer to communicate in writing rather than face to face, and value your privacy. These characteristics are useful for research work, as well as technology driven jobs, but could be a problem for people in patient facing positions.

Challenges

Because you tend to be reserved, formal, and possibly shy, others may find you hard to read or communicate with. As a result, they may decide (incorrectly) that you are aloof or uninterested in making new acquaintances.

Suggestions

To overcome your natural tendency to be reserved and private, you need periodically to get out of your normal routine and talk with your coworkers in their work places or offices. This is especially important for individuals who aspire to supervisory roles (i.e. Chief Resident). Moreover, after meetings you should check with others to make sure everyone got the same message you did.

Interpersonal Sensitivity: Tact and Perceptiveness

Strengths

You are unusually diplomatic, friendly, charming, and sensitive to the needs and feelings of others. You will be able to build and maintain friendships. You are concerned about staff morale and you are a good team player. You value encouraging, protecting, and helping others. These characteristics facilitate performance in the resident position where care giving, patient engagement, and developing long-term relationships are required.

Challenges

Because you are so pleasant and good natured, you may avoid disagreements, become upset by rejection, tend to promise more than you can deliver, and have problems being decisive. In addition, you may be more concerned with pleasing others than with completing your own work.

Suggestions

Because you value getting along with others, you will tend to avoid taking unpopular positions. Be careful not to promise more than you can deliver, to confront problems promptly before they become unmanageable, and let people know where you stand.

Reflective Feedback:

Action Items:

Prudence: Conscientiousness and Self-Discipline

- Strengths You are reasonably planful and careful about procedures, but also are able to be flexible and change directions when necessary.
- Challenges Think through situations to determine whether rules and procedures or flexibility is more important.
- Suggestions Stay open to change and be flexible in uncertain situations. When making decisions, remember that you may never have all the information you need, so be prompt. Prioritize your work, keeping in mind that not every task requires equal effort or attention.

Reflective Feedback:

Action Items:

Inquisitive: Imagination and Curiosity

Strengths

You are open-minded, curious, and imaginative. You understand the big picture, think quickly on your feet, have ideas for solving problems, and are comfortable with unstructured work that entails design, invention, or change. You are receptive to new ideas and value finding better ways of doing things. This is particularly important in the resident position that requires creativity, problem solving, planning, and leadership.

Challenges

Because you are so curious and potentially creative, you may be easily bored unless given new and different assignments. In addition, your fellow residents and other co-workers may not share your enthusiasm for experimentation and/or your love of adventure.

Suggestions

Although you are imaginative and visionary, you may be easily bored with routine tasks; you need to remember to stay with tasks until they are finished.

Action Items:

Learning Approach: Staying up to Date

Strengths

You are knowledgeable and up-to-date concerning current issues and technology. You also seem self-disciplined, achievement-oriented, and productive, and should enjoy pushing tasks to completion. You will value training for yourself and others, will seek opportunities to grow and develop, and will want to apply the latest relevant knowledge to your work. These characteristics are important for the resident position.

Challenges

Because you are so well-informed, you may see through issues more quickly than others and then take action without insuring that others see the point and are ready to move forward.

Suggestions

You value being well-informed; consequently, you should seek training opportunities and you may be frustrated when they are not available. Moreover, you will enjoy setting your own performance goals because you are very achievement oriented.
